Dear guests

The Engadin is rich in sounds: from the gentle whisperings of the Maloja wind, to the tinkling of cowbells, the imposing roar of deer and the enchanting sounds of the Rhaeto-Romanic language. And when your mind is filled with the noisy impressions of the valley, then it is time to hike to one of Engadin’s romantic alpine lakes where silence reigns.

Visit us and listen to the sounds of our valley.
We look forward to your visit.

Chalandamarz

The children of Engadin ring in the spring each year on the first of March. Dressed in traditional costumes, they march through the villages ringing cowbells of all sizes. The name Chalandamarz dates back to when the Engadin was still part of a province of the Roman Empire. “Chalanda” comes from the Latin “kalendae” and refers to the first day of the month. So “Chalandamarz” is the 1st day of the month of March. Before the Julian calendar, this was the first day of the year and the custom was intended to drive away evil spirits at the turn of the year. The children’s book “Schellen-Ursli” made the Chalandamarz known all over the world.

Where stones were chiselled
Sils – “Plattas da Fex” is the name of the unique, grey-reddish stone slabs that can only be found at the far end of Val Fex. The quarry, at an altitude of 2,070 metres, was traditionally worked during the winter months because the slabs could only be split at temperatures below freezing to prevent cracking. Today, the former quarry is open to visitors.

ENGADIN Magazine SUMMER/AUTUMN

Tü-Tä-To

St. Moritz – More of a road trip than a Postbus ride, the “Palm Express” from St. Moritz to Lugano is a four-hour journey from the mountain lakes of the Upper Engadine curving down the Maloja Pass Road to Bergell and from there along the shores of Lake Como to Lugano. What a ride!

Humming engines
The Bernina Gran Turismo is considered one of the most beautiful mountain races for historic vehicles. Passion for vintage cars, sport and modern luxury comes together here.
Summer sun and festival of colours
To be active. To experience nature. To find yourself. This is the Engadin!

Top 5: Summer bucket list
Five things that simply must be experienced during an Engadin summer:

- Take a break at an alpine dairy cottage and taste fresh cheese.
- Visit the exhibition on the Romansh dialect known as Puter in the Chesa Planta Samedan.
- Sit along the banks of the quiet Lägh dal Lunghin with a fishing rod.
- Listen to one of the many concerts the valley has to offer.
- See and hear the deer roaring in the Val Trupchun.

Hello echo
An echo reverberates up to five times when you whoop across the surface of the water on the banks of the Lägh dal Lunghin above Maloja. The first echo is very loud. It is followed by two from the right and then two quieter ones from the left – even more in good conditions.

42 strings make the Engadine zither a sophisticated instrument with an unforgettable sound. Unlike the fingerboard zither, which is related to the guitar, it has a separate string for each note, making it move like a harp.

Cruising at great heights
Operating on Lake Sils is Europe’s highest scheduled boat service. Captain Franco Giani likes to tell passengers the story of his great-grandfather, who brought shipping to the Engadin.

Other sounds
1. The clinking of glasses
   In the Belle Époque bar of the Hotel Kronenhof in Pontresina.
2. Gliding with the wind
   On a tandem paragliding flight with Paragliding Engadin.
3. The raging river
   White water action: family rafting with the Engadin Outdoor Center.
4. The hum of the cable car
   Take advantage of the “Piz Nair Sunrise” offer to see the sunrise on the mountain.
“Sounds don’t care if they make sense or if they are going in the right direction. They are, and that is enough for them.”

JOHN CAGE (1912 - 1992), COMPOSER, EXCERPT FROM “FOR THE BIRDS”
The sound of the Alps

Bells help alpine herdsmen find their animals even when visibility is poor. The animals also use the sound to orientate themselves and to keep in touch with their herd. The bells also signal to hikers and bikers that there is an alpine cottage nearby.

A splashing fountain, the blowing wind, a waterfall thundering in the distance, all topped by a concert of ringing bells. A raucous bunch lives on the Alp da Cavloc in summer – Capra Grigias, Nera Verzasca and various mixed-breed goats from eight farms in the Bergell Valley. In their summer camp high up in an alpine meadow, Mex Matzl and Eno Graber lovingly look after the herd and milk them every day by hand – always under the watchful eye of their dog Rala. They process this exquisite milk into goat cheese, which you can buy on site or enjoy next door in the Cavlocio restaurant, enjoying the view from Piz Materdell to Piz Lagrev.

The cheery tinkling of goat bells on the Cavloc Alp.
This stage of the Via Engiadina leads high above the valley from Bever to Zuoz. Just after Bever, you are swallowed up by a shady forest. The sounds of civilisation disappear while the melodious life of the forest pours into your ears: birds sing of the summer day, the call of an owl echoes through the branches, even the barking of deer can be heard now and then. It is worth leaving the Via Engiadina above Madulain to detour to the signposted Alp Es-cha Dadour. Ruet Ratti is the mountain pastor here while also looking after the alpine community’s verdant pastures, Es-cha Dadains and Belvair. The milk from all three sites is processed at Es-cha Dadour into Ziger, Mutschli soft cheeses, mature alpine cheese or even butter, all delicacies that can be discovered while enjoying a cheese plate on the sun terrace. From the end of June until the end of August, you can watch the cheesemaker at work on Wednesdays at 8:30 am. You can even spend the night there if you are not yet ready to leave this breath-taking alpine paradise.

Alp Laret is located in the biking route paradise of Corviglia. The easiest way to reach it is via the trail from Marguns down to Chantarella. As respite from adventurous cycling, this mountain inn offers a place to rest and enjoy cool drinks and all kinds of tasty treats. If you have enough time and are up for a longer mountain bike tour, treat yourself to the Suvretta Loop described below. Mother and daughter, Gudrun and Miriam Stampfer, welcome you to the inn, where they process 500–900 litres of milk every morning into mutschlis, alpine cheese, stracchino and butter. Gudrun Stampfer is proud to say, “my ricotta is our secret tip. People come from far away to Alp Laret for our cream cheese.” Stampfer’s hands lovingly serve a variety of cheeses plates prettily decorated with alpine flowers. While the dairymaid delights guests with her charming manner, alpine master Elmar Bigger looks after the cows in the Laret and Marguns mountain meadows. He can confidently be called one of the original faces of the local Alps, where he has managed the pastures above Celerina for over 50 years.
A bike tour from Pontresina to Alp la Stretta offers plenty of distractions along the way. And you should not resist the temptation – for example, to park your bike for a while and visit the Morteratsch glacier. Shortly before the Bernina Diavolezza valley station, the trail leads northwards into the Val da Fain to Alp la Stretta, which means the narrow alp. Tasty cheese, bacon, cakes, yoghurt and fresh butter are served here.

However, with all the delicacies on offer, it is quite possible that after the meal your trousers might be a bit “stretta”. Nevertheless, you might feel revitalized enough after the break to take a detour on the single trail to the top of the La Stretta pass.

Bever – The Lataria Engiadinaia in Bever is the highest dairy in Europe. At 1,706 m.a.s.l., it processes milk from cows that spend the summer grazing in the lush alpine pastures of Engadin. Greater portions of roughage consumed by the animals gives mountain milk a higher content of unsaturated fatty acids – especially omega 3. Pleasure at the highest level. engadin.ch/lateria

Alpine procession
Celerina – After spending the summer high up in the mountain meadows, the cows and their herdsmen proceed back down to the valley. Every Saturday in mid or late September, a colourful parade proceeds through the streets of Celerina and ends at the festival grounds near the church of San Gian. The animals wear beautiful bouquets of flowers between their horns and the bells around their necks are polished to a brilliant shine.

Rules of conduct while hiking
- Stay on the path: Only enter fenced pastures if the hiking trail clearly indicates that it is allowed.
- Close gates and fences: Be sure to close gates and fences to prevent grazing animals from escaping.
- Beware of bulls: Keep a safe distance (40–60 metres) away from bulls.
- Keep dogs on a short leash: If a cow attacks your dog, let it off the leash and move on.
- Cow with calf: Never place yourself between a mother cow and her calf.
- Avoid eye contact: If livestock approaches, slowly leave the pasture.
- Feeding prohibited: Even tame animals should not be petted or fed.

Goat trekking
Pontresina – Pontresina offers a unique experience for little Heidis and Peters, who can take a walk with a flock of five goats adorned with ringing bells. The animals can first be petted and groomed before they take a leisurely stroll. Fortunately, goats are never in a hurry.

Festive atmosphere
After the people and animals have left the streets of Celerina behind them, the lovely festival day comes to a happy end on the meadow near the San Gian church with musical sounds and culinary delights.

"At 1,800 m above sea level, you stand between heaven and earth, surrounded by immeasurable beauty. And experience within it a grandiose silence, played only by the sounds of life."

PETER ANDRÉ BLOCH, SWISS GERMANIST,
FROM AN SRF INTERVIEW, 2016
Five minutes of tranquillity

A conversation with Nadia Frey, FMH-certified specialist in psychiatry and psychotherapy from St. Moritz, about sounds and the effect of their absence.

What do noises trigger in our psyche?
Nadia Frey: This tends to depend on our cognitive evaluation. Think of different tastes in music: ecstasy and irritation are not so far apart. Generally speaking, loud noises are evolutionarily perceived more as a danger, in contrast to birdsong or a babbling brook.

Does that mean we should be mindful of the soundscapes we surround ourselves with?
We should get to know ourselves and find out what is good for us. It may be necessary to internally reinterpret sound experiences and change our conditioning. The key usually lies within ourselves.

What happens to us during silence?
Inner silence lowers our stress level and makes us less tense, which in turn is reflected in changes in blood pressure and in the blood vessels. Our immune system is revitalized. The brain has the time it needs to contemplate and think in a relaxed state. This means finding new approaches, making decisions, planning the future, being creative and processing negative thought structures.

What happens when silence is lacking?
While a certain stress level increases our performance for a brief period, insufficient rest over an extended period of time can manifest itself in a wide array of mental and physical symptoms. Fortunately, our nervous system lets us know when something is off, so we can make conscious choices to influence it.

How much silent time does one need to notice a positive effect?
This depends on the intensity and duration of the stress as well as the ability to find peace. The latter can be learned. Even five minutes of quiet can benefit our brain considerably.

Are the mountains particularly suitable for taking a relaxing break?
Mountains truly do offer special beneficial aspects: silence is just one of them. Hiking in the mountains triggers a sense of well-being through physical activity. Nature’s beauty delights our senses; colours seem more intense in the pure air. Air humidity is lower at 1,500 m above sea level, a source of relief for allergy sufferers with its lower concentration of allergens and pollen. The negative ionisation of the air in the mountains feels good, especially near a waterfall roaring down a cliff face. And yet, this loud noise does not bother us: on the contrary!
He sets out when most are still asleep. He is on the hunt for fish. Yet trout and char are not his most valuable catch, but the moments of silence.

Ringing alarm clocks, clinking coffee cups, whirring electric toothbrushes and revving engines – a new day begins in the Engadin. This all goes unnoticed by Daniel Blättler, who headed uphill from Maloja two hours earlier. Just before arriving at his destination, the Lägh dal Lunghin, his early morning efforts are rewarded with the majestic panorama spread before him. Mystical wisps of mist drift over the lake plateau far below, the first rays of sunlight caress the towering mountains, and next to him, his dog Nelly wags her tail happily. And everything is wrapped in a soothing silence. Early morning is Daniel Blättler’s favourite time to pack his rod and go fishing. He revels in the peace and quiet, and says, “the world just keeps growing too noisy for me.” While he enjoys being with people, he needs these escapes from everyday life. The Engadin offers countless places to get away and still be in my homeland. “It’s my way of leaving the hustle and bustle of everyday life behind for a little while.” At that moment, the Lägh dal Lunghin shines with a mirror-like smoothness reflecting the barren mountain landscape. The world up here is not merely acoustically still.

Nevertheless, silence does not mean the absence of noise. Those who immerse themselves in silence have their senses sharpened. The still gentle morning wind whispers softly through the ears, a murmur of water from the stream leading from the lake can be heard and then a soft, rhythmic vibration in the air. Its source is a 27-metre-long fishing line that Daniel Blättler makes dance gracefully over the lake. The idyllic image of the fly fisherman has been familiar at least since the 1992 film, “A River Runs Through it”, with Brad Pitt as Paul Maclean.

Outwitting the fish

Why does one actually whisk a line across the water when fly fishing? Blättler explains: Fly fishing is intended to imitate the insects that fish eat, such as dry flies that move on the surface of the water. The fisherman aims to cast the imitated food as close to the fish as possible, but once it reaches the target, the fly should not sink, but remain visible to the fish on the water surface. This means that one cannot use lead as a weight to cast the line far out into the lake. Instead, a line that is a little thicker and therefore heavier is used to carry the fly out into the lake.
The fly fisherman rhythmically whisks his rod and line back and forth just above the surface of the water.
Daniel Blättler is a silent hunter. He does not swing his pole randomly, but first studies the surroundings. This enables him to see the shades of blue that indicate the structures under the water surface, which is important because fish like to stay on the edges of sloping ledges or behind stones. It is also important to know nature when choosing bait – depending on the season, you use a larva, nymph or fly and you should know which fish are snapping at which prey. “The hunter must adapt to nature,” says Blättler. It is the outwitting of the fish that fascinates him, a passion that gripped him at the age of twelve when he was visiting an aunt in America. Back then, he stood on a jetty for the first time with a line and plastic float and caught a fish. “That’s when the spark ignited,” he recalls. It lit a fire that burns inside him to this day. However, something has changed over the years. “It is meanwhile no longer important to me whether I catch a fish or not.” He says it is nature and the tranquillity that draws him to the waters again and again. Sure, there are moments when the fish bite and trigger a hunting frenzy in you, but there are also unspectacular times. He thinks about everyday life, about his plans, about the universe. Then comes the phase when there is simply nothing. A thought-free moment. “You fish and you are.” This state becomes meditative. “Then I’m in the zone, immersed in a moment of total relaxation.” Though it often happens on its own, every now and then he consciously strives for it. He also likes to be alone when fly fishing. “Because it’s not loneliness, it’s switching-off, time I spend with myself.” He tries to leave his watch at home whenever possible. But when he does not, he always sets an alarm clock for himself. He laughs, saying that otherwise he would lose track of time completely. “That’s real fishing for me.”

Serving fresh fish
Antonio Walther’s Ristorante Murtaröl in Plaun da Lej is anything but quiet. This is where Engadin mingles with the world. The fresh fish served in the restaurant are the only things that stay mum. Everything tastes delicious here, be it fish, freshly caught in Engadin’s lakes, or equally fresh seafood coming directly from Milan’s fish market. And if you like things a bit quieter, book a room in the Hotel Cristallina next door. The early morning hours when the lake is still calm and the air is fresh are truly something to be experienced.

Fish of the Upper Engadin

The fishing grounds in the Engadin are renowned for beautifully coloured brown trout and char, with grayling and rudd also among the native fish found here.

1. Brown Trout and Lake Trout

   Similar in appearance, it is easy to confuse lake trout and Arctic char. The distinguishing feature is that lake trout are more marbled and have a deeper notch on the tail fin. The palate and tongue are white. They are mainly found in the valley lakes, especially Lake Silvaplana and the Inn.

2. Arctic Char (Most Commonly Lake Char and Namaycush or Canadian Lake Trout)

   Besides the weaker marbling, the straight caudal fin of the char differs from the trout, as does the grey pigmented palate. Its fighting nature makes it popular with sport anglers.

3. Grayling

   The grayling prefers cool, fast-flowing waters and are considered tricky to catch. They are also extremely demanding when it comes to water quality.

4. Rudd

   With its bright red fins, the rudd is one of the most beautiful native fish species. It prefers the shallow banks of valley lakes with a muddy, sandy bottom.

“The Engadin sounds like wind chimes”

The native Engadin singer-songwriter Martina Linn once embarked on a musical journey far away to the Southern USA, a journey that changed her musical direction, and ultimately led her back to her roots.

Martina, what does the Engadin sound like to you?

Martina Linn: To me, the Engadin sounds like the wind chimes of the house where the late Evi Engels lived in La Punt. You could hear several wind chimes from there when I was a child, all ringing with different sounds, in minor and major tones. These two sounds are the Engadin for me: both the melancholy minor and the sunny, bright major.

Where do you retreat to in the Engadin when you seek quiet?

Actually, I prefer not to say. With today’s Instagram culture, a place like that can quickly become less quiet. However, between us, it’s Alp Prünella, reached along a beautiful hiking trail from La Punt Chamues-ch. You are wrapped in peace and quiet when you arrive in this extraordinarily beautiful place.

What do you do when you are there?

Mostly I just let nature in and have its way with me. I journal what’s on my mind in the notebook I always have along.

Natural elements like the sun and rain play a big role in your songs. Stones, flowers, seasons. Can it be said that your music is influenced by nature?

Yes, very much. When I started studying singing at the Academy of Art and Design in central Basel, the first thing I did was go to the director of studies and ask: “Where is the closest patch of green from here?”

Even when I’m working in the studio or on the road, it’s essential to me to be able to constantly take breaks in nature. That’s what I miss about Engadin, being able to walk out the door and immediately be in nature.

Martina Linn’s new album celebrates her native Rhaeto-Romanic language.
Your career started as a child with yodelling. That is not exactly typical Engadin culture. That’s right. Our neighbour came from the Valais and she is a yodeller. One day she knocked on our door and told us there was a yodelling choir for children in Samedan. I gave it a try and liked it so much that I asked two friends to join too. We ended up yodelling together for several years, then later formed a trio and I accompanied us on the guitar.

Yodelling and guitar?
Yes (laughs). That is how I learned to accompany my singing with a guitar. It’s quite a challenge and I’m glad to have managed it so early.

When did you know that you wanted to be a professional singer?
I was inspired to do so by a teacher at grammar school. He came to me one day and said he would allow me to take one afternoon off a week to go to singing lessons in Zurich. He was convinced of my talent. I would not have thought of studying singing or going to jazz school without his inspiration. I am grateful to that teacher to this day.

After three albums in the Southern Americana sound, your new album to be released in 2023 will have a whole new sound. What happened?
When I left the Engadin as a young woman to attend jazz school in Lucerne, I wanted to put my roots behind me. I was drawn to the Southern USA, physically and musically. I had this notion that I was just a Southern girl who had been born in the wrong place (laughs).

And that longing is gone now?
Yes. You could say that the Corona period brought me closer to myself and showed me where I belong musically.

And where do you belong? What does the new Martina Linn sound like?
My sound has changed. I make indie folk music today, but perhaps the most significant shift was my decision to sing Rhaeto-Romanic songs now; something that had never occurred to me before. Just before the Corona lockdown, Martina Shuler, director of the Chesa Planta in Samedan, invited me to set poems by Artur Caflisch to music. She has always encouraged me to sing in Romansh. This experience made me fall in love with my native language all over again. Actually, it’s amazing that it took me so long to discover it. Today, I am passionate about my Engadin roots. I consider it a privilege to be able to say, “I am from Engadin.”

What is it like to sing in Rhaeto-Romanic after all these years singing in English?
I have come to realise that Rhaeto-Romanic has always been a part of me. After recording a Rhaeto-Romanic album together with Samuel Baur from Bern in the Stalla d’Immez in Santa Maria, and having studied this beautiful language in depth, I feel it is now time to truly embrace it.

What generally comes easier to you, lyrics or melodies?
Clearly melodies. They come naturally to me and I hear them everywhere. I can just sit at my desk with my guitar on my lap and the melodies flow. Or I find two pieces of wood in the forest and improvise a beat with them. There is a melody in that too.

Engadin is known for its many large and small music festivals. Do you have a favourite?
The Chapella open-air festival, which also happens to be one of the world’s smallest. You can see the stage from your tent. I spontaneously invited a guitarist friend I know from Los Angeles to Chapella. The beauty of the place blew him away.

“Melodies come naturally to me. I hear them everywhere.”

“At night one is what one is supposed to be; not what one has become.”

ERICH MARIA REMARQUE (1898-1970)
Restful nights

The world becomes a different place at night: Photosynthesis stops, the composition of the atmosphere changes and temperatures drop. The wind eases and a secret animal world awakens. This is when we, as humans, go to bed hoping for restful sleep, which can be a long time coming.

Outdoors: As early as the 1950s, researchers discovered that the sleep rhythm changes dramatically for people who spend most of their time in artificially lit rooms and that their day-night rhythm gets out of sync. Sleeping outdoors, eliminating non-natural light sources, triggers a hormonal process that synchronises the inner clock with the natural day-night rhythm. Interestingly, when we sleep outdoors, we need about an hour less sleep to be as refreshed as if we slept indoors.

View of distant galaxies: Thanks to the low levels of light pollution in the Engadin, the starscape is especially visible from the valley. The Milky Way seems close enough to touch in the cloudless night sky, while Saturn and Jupiter are visible to the naked eye. Engadin is at level two of nine on the Bortle scale for classifying light pollution in the night sky. Level one corresponds to the darkness in the desert and level nine to the light pollution in a city centre like Zurich.

Sleep on the rock face: The floating sleeping platforms known as portaledges were invented by climbers in the early 1960s in Yosemite National Park in the USA. The Pontresina mountaineering school offers two different climbing tours – one for beginners and one for experienced climbers – with an overnight stay at dizzying heights.
A night above the abyss

Below her yawns a 250-metre drop, above her a twinkling starry sky: mountaineer Lea sleeps on a sheer rock face for the first time, and reports about her night at the limit.

There is only the murmur of the glacial stream from the glacier; nothing else. Lea lies on the west face of Piz Trovat, where her life hangs on a rigid frame made of aluminium bars, with a piece of fabric stretched between them. Above her is a tarpaulin. She and mountain guide Marcel are tucked in for the night in a portaledge, which is simply a tool for bivouacking on rock faces.

Lea is an experienced climber and mountain explorer. She loves the mountains, but has never spent the night on a rock face. That is, until now. She sets off from Diavolezza with mountain guide Marcel and hikes to the summit of the 3,146-metre-high Piz Trovat. They penetrate further and further into the barren, rugged, rocky landscape, which is reminiscent of photographs taken on Mars. The high-alpine hike takes a little less than an hour. After the steep final ascent, a first reward: a spectacular panoramic view. Towering above it all is the breath-taking Bernina massif with the freshly snow-covered Piz Palü and Piz Bernina at 4,049 metres. Below them is the Pers Glacier. This is Engadin at full throttle, capturing all its wilderness and beauty in one view.
This is where the via ferrata Piz Trovat II climbing route begins, a challenge for experts, located in very (K5) to extremely (K6) difficult terrain, one that is familiar to Lea and Marcel. They secure themselves to the wire rope with their climbing harnesses – the Gstältli – and their carabiners. They skilfully climb down the wall backwards, effortlessly mastering the biceps wall and longer overhanging section. Marcel does the whole thing carrying his 20-kilogram portaledge on his back, making him appear alien with his oversized backpack in the mountains of Engadin. He eventually stops descending and calmly begins to set up the portaledge. Perched on the vertical rock face, he assembles the aluminium poles, stretches the fabric and throws the tent over the frame. Each move is perfectly choreographed, each knot precisely tied. Marcel is intensely focused, there is little talking while Lea helps and prepares herself inwardly for the night ahead. Even though she spends a lot of time in the mountains, a night on the rock face is something special for her. “I’m most curious about the sounds of the night and I wonder how much sleep I’ll get,” says Lea. She is not nervous, but curious.

Silent spectacle
The camp is set up for the night, just a few square metres perched on a vertical wall. Above the portaledge there are 90 metres of rock face, below 250 metres. Lea and Marcel make themselves as comfortable as a portaledge affords. Marcel unpacks a gas cooker and makes some coffee. The aroma spreads along the rock face. But that’s merely the beginning; the experienced mountain cook prepares chicken tikka masala and chilli sin carne for Lea. While it is not gourmet cuisine, the food tastes particularly good in this exposed location. Veils of clouds wrap around the peaks, the light changes and soon the sun disappears.

An eagle soars nearly silently along the rock face and close to the night camp. Jackdaws circle, making their croaking calls. It is getting cold on the wall, with temperatures dropping into single digits. Lea and Marcel zip up their sleeping bags tighter. It is dark now, with their headlamps the only sources of light for far and wide.
They switch them off now and then and stick their heads out of the tent to look up. A natural spectacle has begun above them, which makes it clear why the portaledge experience is so magical. There are stars everywhere, seeming to shine more brightly than ever in the clear night sky. Lea and Marcel reverently take it all in. With their lamps off they are wrapped in total darkness, but not silence. The glacial stream is their constant companion throughout the night, rushing down into the valley just 400 metres away from the portaledge. At one point, the crack of a glacier breaking off in the distance can be heard, then the crashing of a falling stone. Otherwise, the stream plays a solo, erasing all sense of time.

Awe-inspiring spread of colours
As dawn approaches, Lea sits up and unzips the tent. Her view is immediately dominated by the Bernina massif, which is beginning to take on a bluish hue. Below her spreads the gorge above which she has spent the night. A new day is dawning. Blue slowly turns to orange, and suddenly the sun’s rays bathe the mountains in a yellow glow in an amazing palette of colours. The peaks, rock faces and glaciers look completely different than they had in the evening light. Peace reigns here, the kind of peace you only find in the mountains. Lea says, “When you’re sitting there on that rock face, surrounded by mountains, you feel enormously small – the elements are overwhelmingly powerful.” You simply cannot get much closer to nature than this. These are moments you wish you could capture forever. After a cup of coffee and a simple breakfast, the equipment is quickly packed away and stowed on Marcel’s back, then the two climb back up the rock face. They are taking the memory of this extraordinary experience with them. Back down in the valley Lea describes it as a night she would like to repeat. She cannot say how much she slept, but she seems quite relaxed and rested.

Climbing paradise
If you prefer not to spend the night on a rock face, Engadin also offers routes for beginners and experienced sport climbers:

Piz Trovat
Pontresina – “The most beautiful test of courage in the Engadin” is what the two via ferratas (protected climbing route) Piz Torvat have been called. They offer a breath-taking view of the glacial world of Piz Palu.

Fornhütte
Maloja – The SAC Fornhütte can be reached in around four hours from Maloja. The climbing garden near the hut is just the right thing for beginners and families.

Lagalb
Pontresina – The climbing garden Piz Alv on Lagalb is one of the largest and most varied in the Engadin. As an added bonuses ibexes often watch from afar.

Plaun da Lej
Maloja – Take care not to be too distracted by the view while climbing. The upper section of this climbing garden offers an extraordinary view of the Silsersee, Maloja and the Piz da la Marm.

Safe? Sure!
Unlike a bivouac, which is set up on a rocky outcrop, a portaledge hangs freely in the air – suspended from a single hook in the rock face.

Night-time sounds
Traffic noise, the party next door, too much on your mind? Immerse yourself in a night’s rest in Engadin.

Starry cuisine
There are more than just stars in the night sky in the Engadin. Throughout the villages are 26 top restaurants with a total of 7 Michelin stars awaiting hungry guests.

For those not drawn to the vertical: eleven mountain bike routes or single trails lead from and through Pontresina alone. Bikes and equipment can be rented at the bike centre near the railway station.

Packing list

This equipment is worth buying for more frequent climbing excursions:

- Climbing shoes
  The tight climbing shoes take some getting used to, though models for beginners are cut to be extra comfortable.

- Climbing harness
  The harness should ideally sit at belly button height. The leg loops should be neither too wide nor too tight.

- Climbing helmet
  The helmet should always fit the circumference of your head and be adjustable so that it does not wobble when unbuckled.

400 kilometres of riding pleasure in total can be found cycling the combined bike trails of the Engadin. Enthusiastic athletes and hobby bikers can choose from a variety of tours through forests and valleys, to mountain lakes and glaciers. engadin.ch/bike

The Chesa Planta Samedan has been the guardian, repository and centre of the Rhaeto-Romanic language for 80 years. Four truly special women have made this possible. Take a journey through the history of a unique institution.

Farmhouse and stately home
The Chesa Planta Samedan stands tall, proud and stately, with the heart of the Romansh language pulsating within. It functions as a cultural centre, an archive, living museum and library – housing one of the largest and most valuable collections of books and manuscripts in Rhaeto-Romanic.

However, the Chesa Planta is much more. It is also a kaleidoscope, replete with history and stories, some quiet, others boisterous, some well-known while others await to be experienced.

The journey into the valley’s past begins here, one that offers insight into events great and minor in the turmoil of world history and in the Engadin, and ultimately back to four women, without whose commitment the Chesa Planta would not be open to everyone today.

We lean against the thick, heavy walls and listen to the stories about the von Planta and von Salis families who were ranking among the most influential in Graubünden for centuries. These two ancient noble families were successful in business, active in politics, in the church and in the military. They left countless architectural footprints throughout the canton, among them enchanting stately homes and Belle Époque palaces. The history of the two families comes together at the Chesa Planta. Originally built by the von Salis family in the late 16th century as a manor house, it became their ancestral home. The manor was extended on its south side with a late Baroque addition around 200 years later. It remained in the possession of the von Salis family for centuries until 1817, when the von Planta family purchased it. This grand dame has since been known as Chesa Planta.

About a century and a half later, the Chesa Planta was caught up in the turmoil of the Second World War, despite being far from the battlefields. In October 1943, American fighter planes were on a mission to destroy an aircraft factory in Germany. A thick blanket of cloud obscured the sky making visibility poor, so that twelve bombs were accidentally dropped over Samedan. One also hit the forecourt of the Chesa Planta, shattering windows, destroying interior walls, even damaging some of the valuable tiled stoves. The house was carefully restored with reparation payments from faraway America and funds from other sympathetic sources.

“Aunt Ebe” and her nieces
Chesa Planta tells another story from the same period. One that is somewhat quieter than the detonations of bombs, less visible than the structural changes. It is the story of four women who are responsible for the unique experience of the Chesa Planta as we know it today. Their life stories span nearly an entire century.

Elisabeth von Planta was born in 1855. At the age of 26 she married Rudolf von Planta, who would later inherit the Chesa Planta in 1903. Elisabeth and her husband travelled widely, had homes in Italy, Chur and Zurich. They spent the summer months in the Chesa Planta in Engadin. However, their road was not always smooth. They had three children, each of which died at the age of two.

Elisabeth is described as “active and strong”, a woman who devotedly looked after the Chesa Planta, the garden and the associated farm operation. She was called “Aunt Ebe” by her three nieces Marie, Nina and Lily. The three of them are said to have had great admiration for their aunt, a strong woman who did not let the blows of fate get her down. They visited her often, travelling from Tänikon in Thurgau, where they grew up on the von Planta family’s monastic estate, to spend their holidays together in the mountains. With no descendants,
Three sisters with a feeling for language

Marie Bertha von Planta was born in 1889. Hers was an adventurous life with a touch of melancholy. Marie spent a lot of time travelling through Portugal, Italy and Austria. It is said that she was known as “La Baronesse” in the south, which she loved. In her later years she lived exclusively in hotels, and is described as headstrong and generous, yet also as someone who could not find her place in society, and who retreated into a dream world anchored in the past.

Her younger sister, Nina Magdalena von Gugelberg, was born in 1890. At a time when social opportunities for women were strictly limited, Nina did not let this hold her back. She rode horses and embarked on adventures and travels. While skiing in Lenzerheide, she met her husband, whose family owned Salenegg Castle near Maienfeld. Being mistress of the castle did not curb her thirst for adventure nor her courage to go new, unconventional ways. She did not shy away from lending a hand in the castle’s own vineyard, and went on to modernise it, guiding it through the turmoil of the Second World War. She loved cars and drove a BMW with the number plate “GR 6”, one of the first issued in the canton. At that time, driving a car in Graubünden was occasionally forbidden, and was certainly daring, particularly for a woman.

The youngest of the three sisters was Anna Elisabeth Lily Vischer, born in 1892. Lily was well-read, loved languages and spoke fluent French and English. She often attended lectures at the universities of Zurich and Geneva. She had a passion for music and is said to have sung beautifully up to a ripe old age. She brought this passion for culture with her when she helped found the Chesa Planta Samedan Foundation. She moved to Basel after she married, where her “Zurich manners” were not well received everywhere. However, she was eventually able to win over the uptight Basel society with her charming personality.

Elisabeth and her husband decided to bequeath the house to their three nieces on Rudolf’s death, with the clause that Elisabeth could spend the rest of her days there. This proved to be decisive for Chesa Planta as we know it today.

None of the three sisters intended to live in Samedan permanently, yet they were also unwilling to consider selling the house. Together with their “Aunt Ebe”, the sisters decided to create a foundation for Romansh culture and language in the Chesa Planta in 1943 – notwithstanding the bombs that fell on Samedan that same year. This incident did not deter them. Their legacy has become a veritable treasure trove over the decades.

The Chesa Planta Samedan celebrates its anniversary

In 2023, the Chesa Planta in Samedan will celebrate two anniversaries: the “Fundaziun de Planta” foundation for the preservation of the Rhaeto-Romanic language was founded 80 years ago, and the foundation’s popular language courses and cultural weeks will be 50 years old. To mark this double anniversary, along with its annual cultural programme, the Chesa Planta is staging a special exhibition on the Romansh Puter dialect and on the historical development of reading glasses. “Horizons – visions” is also the theme of the 2023 summer cultural programme.

Puntresina – The library in the brand-new Hotel maistra160 is a pet project of hotel owner Bettina Plattner-Gerber. Browsing through a wide range of literature about the Engadin, hotel guests will find inspiration for their stay. To be found is a wide range of books that have been written in the valley or by local authors, along with current fiction. The maistra160 opens its doors in summer 2023; the unsigned painting pictured above can be seen in the library maistra160.ch

Poesia rumauntscha

The Engadin musician Martina Linn (see interview on page 52) recites the poem “November” by the Rhaeto-Romanic lyricist Artur Caflisch. It poignantly captures the metamorphosis of nature in autumn.

Tongue twisters in Rhaeto-Romanic

“Tschinch chatscheders giuan a chatscha da tschinch chamuotschs” – Five hunters go hunting for five chamois –
“The voice of nature, she has not deceived me.”

Animal Kingdom

The Swiss National Park offers a protected habitat where wild animals can find abundant food and shelter. In this safe environment, they calmly accept being watched by two-legged friends. A family hike through the Val Trupchun offers a great opportunity to do just that.
Call of the wild

While it may be an energy-sapping affair for the deer, it is a tremendous natural spectacle for people: exploring the Swiss National Park during the rutting season.

King of the forests

While other animals are preparing for winter, laying on fat to get through the cold days or stocking up on food in their nests, the most strenuous time of the year begins for male red deer: the rut. They attract the attention of females with their loud roars, while their impressive displays serve to scare off possible rivals and to avoid an exhausting fight.
Swallowed up by the ground

Marmots retreat into their padded winter burrows at the end of September, but do not sleep solidly through the winter. They wake from hibernation every two weeks and raise their body temperature from 4 to 38 degrees for 36 hours, in a natural process that protects them from freezing to death. They leave their burrows between the end of March and mid-April after around 13 such cycles. They often first have to dig their way through a blanket of snow to reach the light.

Marmots warn each other of danger with their distinctive whistles. You can see and hear “Mungga” – as they are known in the local dialect – between April and September.

Where the marmots come to play from April to September: on the Trupchun Alp.
Chamois are known for their amazing climbing skills. Their preferred habitat is up high at around 3,500 metres. The combination of the hard shell and leathery soft core of their hooves enables them to gracefully conquer awe-inspiring heights and slippery rock faces. This practical combination provided inspiration for the first climbing shoes.

You are lucky indeed if you hear the call of a chamois as they call out with a whistle only rarely when in danger.

Intrepid climbers

Chamois enjoy a varied landscape of rock, forest and pastures. These hardy animals even spend winters at higher altitudes.

Illegal actions with good intentions

The ibex disappeared from Graubünden around 1650. Its lack of shyness and a popular misconception of the healing properties of various ibex preparations proved to be its undoing. At the beginning of the 20th century, the Swiss government secretly hired Italian poachers to cross the border and steal a few ibex fawns, risking their lives as poaching was punishable by the death penalty in Italy. A breeding programme was established and the first ibex were reintroduced to the Swiss National Park in June 1920.

Generally silent animals, like the chamois, ibex also emit whistles when in danger, though males also click their tongues during the mating season.

Welcome back

The mighty bearded vulture had a bad reputation and became known as a "lamb vulture". It was believed that they stole young lambs, nor shy away from young children. This was a myth. The truth is that the peaceful bearded vulture lives on carrion and bones, and its claws are unsuitable for catching live prey. Nevertheless, intensive hunting had driven the bearded vulture completely from the Alps by the beginning of the 20th century. Then in 1991, the Swiss National Park became one of the first reintroduction sites in the alpine region, a true success story as the bearded vulture has since reproduced extremely successfully.

It is highly unlikely that you will hear a bearded vulture calling.

It mainly uses its voice only when looking after its young.

“Sound off” in the new National Park Centre

The National Park Centre in Zernez present a whole new look when it reopens on 3 June 2023, and what’s more, it will also make sounds! Visitors will experience the sounds heard in the Swiss National Park throughout the seasons. The wind whistling round your ears, the far-off call of the pine grouse, the roars of deer and an avalanche thundering down the mountain in winter.

Bird song can be heard here

Pontresina – The Alpine Museum exhibits a collection of 133 species of birds that are native to the Upper Engadin, naturally with their songs and calls.

Drifting, jumping, sliding, shredding

Silvaplana – You no longer need snow and a half pipe to practise snowboard tricks: this new freestyle facility offers action-hungry skiers and snowboarders a place to train on a dry slope, a surf wave, a skimboarding facility, various trampolines and pump tracks. Great fun for all ages.

Highlights from summer and winter for idyllic holidays in the Engadin.
Mountain biking

1. Trais Fluoars

Celerina – “Trais Fluoars” means “Three Flowers” in Romansh: the name both of a trio of mountain pinnacles high above Celerina as well as the thrilling mountain bike trail that leads right below the dramatic outcrops. The route starts high up on the Piz Nair and finishes down in Samedan. The spectacular panoramic views along the way – of the surrounding 3,000-metre peaks, the Bernina massif and the Bernina valley – provide motivation and energy for the demanding 19-kilometre ride. engadin.ch/three-flowers

2. Pass-Piz-Lake trail safari

Bernina Pass – While you might spot a marmot or two along the way on this safari, you are also sure to enjoy the diverse terrain in magnificent surroundings. You will find lakes both large and small glistening on the Bernina Pass, the awesome flowing Morteratsch glacier, hear the ringing of the bell at the church in San Gian near Celerina, while Piz Nair beckons with its expansive views over the valley. You can experience all this and more on a 42-kilometre route that challenges even expert bikers. engadin.ch/pass-piz-lake-trail-safari

3. Flow Trail Safari

Corviglia – Speed from wave to wave and dare a little more with each one: the Flow Trail Safari is truly an adventure, even for less experienced bikers. The trail starts on the easier Marmotta Flow Trail leading to Marguns. From here, the chairlift takes you to Corviglia for the second descent, the WM Flow Trail. The adventure ends with the Foppettas Flow Trail in Champfèr. What a ride!

engadin.ch/flow-trail-safari-blue

4. Piz Nair – Fuorcla Valletta – Samedan

St. Moritz – Many trails lead down from Piz Nair at 3057 m a.s.l. – one of them climbs over the Fuorcla Schlattain and Fuorcla Valletta passes to Samedan.

It is quite a demanding route, especially with the push and carry passages shortly before Valletta. The effort is nevertheless rewarding with a stunning descent and a delicious Kaiserschmarrn at Alp Mun-tatsch. engadin.ch/piz-nair-fuorcla-valletta

Bernina Express to Poschiavo

Pontresina – The Bernina Express offers the most attractive ride between the Alpine Engadin and the Mediterranean landscapes to the south, linking Pontresina with the town of Tirano in the Valtellina. Part of the route runs along the Albula line, a UNESCO World Heritage Site. The route is full of contrasts. At first, the panoramic windows frame the mighty glaciers of the Bernina massif; soon after, passengers are gazing out on the palms of the sunny south. The train journey makes an ideal day trip. engadin.ch/bernina-express/en

Virtual Glacier World

Pontresina – In the “Virtual Reality Glacier Experience” exhibition at the Diavolezza valley station, you can immerse yourself in the world of glaciers. Equipped with virtual reality goggles, you’ll go on a journey through time that will take you from 1875 to 2100. The exhibition impressively highlights the changes in the Morteratsch glacier. engadin.ch/vr-experience

Soglio

Bergell – Unlike other Alpine valleys, the Engadin is not a cul-de-sac but open to the world in all directions via different mountain passes. One is the Maloja Pass, gateway to the Val Bregaglia, a valley of fascinating stories, beautiful natural landscapes and romantic villages. The painter Giovanni Segantini described the village of Soglio, for example, as the “threshold to paradise.” Anyone who would like to experience this charm for themselves can reach Soglio by PostBus from Maloja in about an hour. bregaglia.ch

Skiing & snowboarding

Down the White Carpet
The thought of immaculately prepared but deserted pistes is enough to get even the most laid-back skier or snowboarder out of bed early. Many lifts in the region already start at 7:45 am: no hint of a queue anywhere. At the summit, as the first rays of sunshine light up the slopes, early risers enjoy their personal White Carpet: a glorious run down perfect pistes. There’s no better way to start the day! engadin.ch/en/white-carpet

Snow Safari
The Snow Safari leads across several different ski areas and to the cosiest mountain restaurants in the Engadin. In just one day, skiers and snowboarders discover nine of the finest runs, enjoy 88 kilometres of piste and conquer no fewer than 4,444 vertical metres. engadin.ch/snow-safari

Snow-Deal
Book early for the best deal! The region’s lift company operates a dynamic pricing system that allows visitors who plan ahead to enjoy an early-booking discount when they buy their lift pass. snow-deal.ch/en

Sleep + Ski
While it is worth spending at least one night in Engadin, the Sleep + Ski offer makes it all the more worthwhile. Activities on ice

Climbing walls of ice
With crampons on their boots and an ice axe in each hand, enthusiasts scale mighty walls of ice painstakingly. They have two options in the Engadin for testing their skills. By the Corvatsch cable car summit station, staff release water at the cliff top to create an ice climbing wall, the highest of its kind in the world; aficionados can also tackle the frozen waterfall in the gorge at Pontresina. The Pontresina Mountaineering School offers daring novices the chance to try the sport under expert guidance. engadin.ch/ice-climbing

Black ice
Sub-zero temperatures and no snowfall: when these conditions coincide, the surface of the Engadin lakes freezes to form a transparent sheet of ice, black and mysterious, sparkling in the sunshine. This wonder of nature is rare, however, occurring only about twice a decade. Locals and visitors venture onto the ice at their own risk. Information about the state of the ice and tips on how to enjoy it safely are available from local tourist information offices. engadin.ch/black-ice

Madulain-Zuoz ice path
Madulain/Zuoz – Skate across the snow-covered meadows along the Inn, admire the play of light on the river, enjoy the views of the historical heart of the village of Madulain and breathe the pure tranquillity that reigns along the valley floor: the Madulain “ice path” offers a special skating experience, surrounded by nature. Far from the pistes: tips for extra safety

The freedoms of a freeride outing also carry certain dangers. However, by following various rules, participants can reduce risk. Riders should study the latest weather and avalanche reports before every trip, for example; they should venture on to open terrain only in company and never alone; tackle steep slopes one by one; and carry the necessary equipment at all times. Find further tips for freeriders at: engadin.ch/free-ride

Snowshoeing along the Lake Trail

Furtschellas – The Corvatsch Lake Trail is an easy snowshoe trail with an extra level of comfort and convenience. Freeride heaven

Diavolezza-Lagalb – The Diavolezza-Lagalb region is heaven for anyone who loves the thrill of riding untracked powder snow. The best way to discover the finest off-piste terrain in safety is to explore in the company of one of the experienced mountain guides from Go Vertical: these specialists know the terrain like the back of their hand:

Avalanche awareness courses

Anyone who ventures off-piste will benefit from one of the avalanche awareness courses run by the Pontresina Mountaineering School. This basic training for all ski tourers and freeriders focuses on preventing avalanches, but also offers practice in what to do in an emergency:

Cultural attractions

1. Camera obscura
   On the Bernina Pass you will find a strange silo with a small hole in the side wall containing a fascinating world hidden inside, a camera obscura. When light shines through the small hole onto the concave inner wall it reflects an image of the landscape. engadin.ch/bernina-glaciers

2. La Tuor
   Samedan – The 800-year-old watchtower is now open to the public as a museum and displays cultural creations from Engadin; from art, music, architecture and crafts, to design. engadin.ch/latuor

3. Guardaval Ruin
   Madulain – Although what was once the largest castle in the Upper Engadin now stands guard over the valley only as a ruin, a fresh breeze of music blows through its walls from time to time. The small “Guardaval Sounds” festival takes place here every July. The castle was built in 1250 by the diocese of Chur, and if you are hiking the Via Engiadina, you can visit it from La Punt Chamues-ch or Zuoz via “Plaun Grand”. engadin.ch/guardaval-ruins

4. Galleria Maurizio
   Maloja – As an architect, Renato Maurizio has designed many houses, but his alpine artworks on paper have long been known only to his desk drawer. Now the exquisite drawings he has made over the years on his walks are on display in the gallery studiomaurizio.ch

5. Open Doors
   For one weekend at the end of June, more than 60 Engadin architectural gems open their doors and welcome architecture lovers. On an individually arranged tour, you can catch a glimpse of an otherwise private world and listen to the stories that the walls have to tell. engadin.ch/architectural-gems

Events

SunIce Festival
St. Moritz – After last year’s great success, the SunIce techno and electro beats festival will take place for the second time from 30 March – 2 April 2023. International DJs will heat things up at night, and those who still have energy in their bones during the day can combine their festival weekend with quad biking, paragliding or skiing. engadin.ch/sunice-festival

Origen Festival Cultural
Origen stands for one of the most idiosyncratic cultural institutions in the Alpine region. The productions do not need four walls or a fixed theatre to tell stories; Origen takes place in churches, in village squares, in classrooms – and until the end of August 2023 in the red wooden tower on the Julier Pass. engadin.ch/origen-festival

Festival da Jazz
St. Moritz – From the legendary Dracula Club up to the heights of Muottas Muragl: the impressive line-up has delighted visitors for many years with an eclectic mix of music and in enchanting locations. festivaldajazz.ch

 Restaurants

3 Kulm Country Club
St. Moritz – A place James Bond would love. In the historic ice pavilion in Kulm Park, completely redesigned by star architect Lord Foster, the Country Club welcomes connoisseurs of dignified ambience and gourmet food with 13 Gault Millau points. engadin.ch/kulm-country

4 La Trattoria
Pontresina – The elegant “La Stüva” in the Hotel Walther became the no less exquisite “La Trattoria” in 2019. The redesign by interior designer Virginia Maissen provides an “Italianità” flair and the perfect setting for enjoying delicious homemade pasta creations and traditional Italian dishes. engadin.ch/latrattoria

3 Kunst-Café
Samedan – With its design classics, the Art Café is a must for all fans of vintage furniture. Authentic coffee and tea culture can be found here. This offshoot of the Piz Linard inn in Lavin also serves soups, paninis and other delicacies for snacking from midday onwards. engadin.ch/art-gallery-cafe

4 Ochsenbrugg-Beizli
Celerina – When the weather is good, the open-air Beizli serves snacks and drinks directly along the hiking trail between Celerina and Samedan in a sunny location near the Ochsenbrücke bridge. engadin.ch/ochsbrugg

Beach Club
Sils – This is where those who love water sports satisfy their hunger for surfing, kitesurfing and more. You can find the Beach Club Sils along the northern shore of Lake Silvaplana. Fill up on delicious pizza, pasta, salads and other homemade specialities. And if you still have the energy, have more fun in the playground or on the beach volleyball court. engadin.ch/beachclub-sils

How to reach the Engadin

The red Bernina Express follows a spectacular route through the mountains on its way to the Engadin, twisting along narrow valleys, slipping through countless tunnels and gliding across bridges and viaducts. The ride is a two-hour adventure to rival any journey in the world.

Motorists can look forward to a dramatic drive to the Engadin. The various pass roads promise plenty of twists and turns along with superb views. Alternatively motorists can skip the pass roads by using the car transporter rail service through the Vereina tunnel.
